The Clear Harmony headphones come in a zippered case that is form fitted to the headphones when folded with a space inside for an iPod or other MP3 player. It comes with a nice long cord, .25" stereo jack which fits standard plug in your home stereo and an airline jack adapter. The quality in the construction is evident when you first put them on. The soft ear pieces and headband sat gently on our ears and head.

When we first saw the unit, we thought it looked a lot like the Bose headsets but that is where the similarity ends. It comes with 2 AAA batteries but these are only necessary if you use the noise cancelling feature. Unlike the Bose, the Clear Harmony works without batteries. We took several trips across country in the last few months and found that these are one of the most comfortable headphones we have ever worn. We wore them while watching DVDs, playing our PSP and listening to our MP3 player for a total of 4-5 hours at a stretch. They were fantastic. The noise cancellation is really amazing. The sound inside an airplane cabin can be almost deafening but with these headphones on and the noise cancelling activated, it noise was silenced, what a treat. Able Planet also included some cutting edge technology called Linx Audio. This is a similar sound enhancement technology that is being used in hearing aids. This improves the sound of anything you listen to through these headphones.

Currently this headset can only be purchased from Able Planet's website for $299.99. Great product with wonderful sound but we figured if it was about $50 or so less, these will easily be best-sellers.
